SUMMARY

3rd year DT who has started as 3Tech in an even front and 4i in an odd front. He is listed at 6040 and 300 pounds with great length (34.5"), a well built frame, and is light on his feet with great quickness and play strength. Great get off with good snap anticipation. He is often the first player off the LOS. He has a great initial punch that jolts opposing linemen. He shoots his hands quick and inside with good pad level, which allows him to get great push in the interior of the line. Does a good job of tackling the ball carrier and doesn't miss many tackles. Against the run, he can control opposing blockers, disengage and pursue the ball carrier. Against the pass, he fires out quick with good hand placement. Frequently leverages a bull rush and has a variety of pass-rush moves, which includes a club and a rip move of which he can separate and accelerate to the quarterback. Defends his legs against chop blacks adequately, which allow him to pursue the ball carrier. Can generate push against OTs and OGs because of his strength and use of hands. Has the quickness to beat OGs and the strength the collapse to pocket on OTs. Does a great job of stacking and shedding against the run. Against outside zones, needs better gap integrity as he can be pushed out or past a play, which creates a cutback line for the ball carrier. Has too many loaf plays for a player with his ability and needs to get better conditioned for late in games. Too often he gives great impact in the first three and a half quarters, only to fade near the end of a game. Overall, he is a great player who will likely develop into a Pro-Bowl caliber player with better conditioning. He is productive against the run and pass so he is a three-down player. His best fit is in an upfield attacking one-gap 4-3 defense as a 3-technique where can utilize his initial quickness and disruptive abilities best. He is a great player who you can build a defense around. Would be a welcome addition to any team.
