SUMMARY

Veteran TE who has started 62 games over his 8 year career. Has executed in a variety of positions in his career. Displays marginal size for the TE position with good athletic ability. Tough competitor in the run and pass game. Has the physical prowess and effort needed to win in the run game. Has a quick first step as a run blocker with the athleticism needed to Reach DEs, cut off the backside, and execute in space. Plays with good hip and pad level, exploding into his blocks with good leverage and hand placement. Sustains his block through the whistle. Has the ability to stay between his man and the QB in pass pro. Gets a clean release off the LOS and stretches the field, showing the ability to read coverages on the move finding the holes vs Cover 2 and 4. Is quick at the top of routes and understands how to use his body to get leverage and separation vs. most safeties and nickels. Has strong hands, can make contested catches, and plays with good ball security. Shows the ability to be a hands catcher in space and is more of a body catcher in a crowd. Seldom used in Pass Protection due to his lack of girth and contributions in the receiving game. His short arms are problematic as a Drive blocker as defenders are able to penetrate his body forcing him to absorb the contact rather than deliver it. His size gives his QB a smaller window to get him the ball. His muscular stout frame creates challenges when he must adjust to the football. Overall, this prospect can be a major asset to your team. Provides that versatility to play TE, H or FB allowing you to add depth at other positions on your 53. As a former WR he understands leverage techniques in route running and how to create separation. Plays with a low center of gravity. Has a quick first step allowing him to beat DEs to the spot. Can create stalemates or win his one on ones. This prospect is also skilled enough to contribute at multiple positions on Special Teams.
